Nuclear translocation of beta-catenin is suggested to be a crucial step for beta-catenin to act as a transcriptional regulator. However, the mechanism of nuclear translocation of beta-catenin remains unknown. Here, we report a novel mechanism for nuclear translocation of beta-catenin. The beta-catenin monomer can interact with a FZD receptor, FZD9, to form a membrane-associated complex. We observed that the beta-catenin/FZD9 complex formed a caveolae-like endocytosis-promoting structure in transfected cells. Upon caveolae formation, beta-catenin and FZD9 translocated to the nucleus. We determined that FZD9 was responsible for the nuclear translocation of beta-catenin. Our data suggested a model for the formation of endocytosis-promoting complex containing beta-catenin and FZD9, and its nuclear translocation.Percutaneous transhepatic cholangiodrainage in pediatric transjugular intrahepatic portosystemic shunts. Transjugular intrahepatic portosystemic shunt (TIPS) is the treatment of choice for a variety of portal hypertension-related complications. Drainage of intrahepatic biliary ducts into the stomach is rarely indicated in adults. The aim of this study was to evaluate the feasibility and safety of percutaneous transhepatic cholangiodrainage (PTCD) in a pediatric TIPS population. Eight-year-old girl with Budd-Chiari syndrome underwent a successful TIPS in the right portal vein for prophylaxis of recurrent variceal bleeding. The girl presented repeatedly with cholangitis at the porta hepat 3e33713323
